Lessons 1–5 · Review

Lesson 6

TIPS

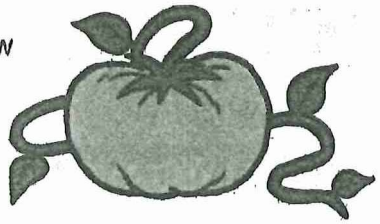

- Dividing words into syllables can help you spell them. Usually, you can divide between a root or base word and a prefix or suffix, as in re/act. You can divide between two consonants that come between two vowels, as in col/lect. When only one consonant comes between two vowels, divide after the first vowel if it is long, as in pro/tect, and after the consonant if the vowel is short, as in sat/is/fy. A vowel can also form its own syllable, as in vi/o/lent.
- Pay particular attention to the spelling of word endings. Words ending with al, such as fiscal, may sound as if they end with le or el. The /ər/ sound you hear at the end of junior can be spelled many ways, as in murmur, grammar, humor, and super.
- Pay attention to words that have endings beginning with vowels. These may have had their final consonants doubled if the vowel before the consonant is short, as in trotting and permitted.
