Matrimmony during the Middle Ages was considered a family affair, and weddings themselves were not often lavish. From our purspective, they offered little in the way of spectakle for members of the community. In Italy, for example, a couple exchanged gifts, such as a piece of fruit, in the seklusion of the Brides house. The "vows" could be as simple as "Will you marry me" "I will." The presence of a state or religious official, includeing a priest or rabbi, was not even necessary. The role of a religious leader at a medieval Wedding was simply to bless the couple after the ceremony.
